International Resources Group

Policy and Economic Governance

A key component of successful governance is a continued focus on transparency and accountability. Working with public and private organizations, International Resources Group helps countries address the challenges of good governance – from establishing basic laws and regulations to promoting inclusive and participatory political systems, and to a politically active civil society that demands better government services. In addition, IRG provides guidance to countries seeking to advance their regulatory, enforcement, and investment climates through sound policy formulation. IRG is committed to strengthening the institutions and societies in which strong democracies can flourish through its work to improve anti-corruption incentives, engage citizens, increase legislative strengthening, and develop efficient processes.

Representative Projects

Strengthening the Judicial System in Afghanistan

In various capacities IRG assisted both the US Department of State and the US Institute of Peace to bring about policy change in Afghanistan. For the USIP, IRG convened Afghan and international experts to discuss specific challenges in advancing the rule of law in Afghanistan, and explored practical solutions to some of the important issues facing Afghan justice professionals. For the US Department of State, IRG in conjunction with Afghanistan's Judicial Commission, planned, and implemented several conferences on Afghan and International Criminal Law and Procedure in Kabul. After the fall of the Taliban regime, IRG organized and synthesized Afghanistan's constitutional and religious, secular, and customary laws in time for the traditional gathering to choose national leaders, the loya jirga. Afghanistan: Judicial Conference, Legal Seminars, Legal Codes

Enhancing Capacity of Conservation Agencies

IRG is developing a working model of co-management that will be feasible and replicable for government and community interests while meeting economic development and conservation needs. In tandem, IRG is implementing a public awareness campaign that informs public opinion about the importance of biodiversity conservation, outdoor recreation and ecotourism, vital environmental services, and the rationale for a co-management approach. IRG is examining the immediate needs and means for enhancing the capacity of the Forest Department and local officials to ensure the integrity of the targeted protected areas. Bangladesh: Co-Management of Tropical Forest Resource

Transforming Industrial Standards in Asia

IRG received top marks for its technical support to the US-AEP Secretariat for a policy agenda aimed at achieving a clean industrial transformation in Asia. IRG technical assistance included policy analysis and network development, environmental sector assessment, and strategic planning. IRG worked with the Secretariat to co-sponsor a workshop featuring environmental benchmarking and information disclosure. Participants expressed interest in pursuing more technical aspects of corporate environmental benchmarking and Global Reporting Initiatives. One such study surveyed investment policies and practices and their effects on the environment in Taiwan. The greening of Industry Network/Asia, which IRG supported through US-AEP, made important connections among countries, sectors, ideas, organizations, and people. Under this contract, IRG brought together more than 300 international experts, researchers, NGOs, and policymakers at the Ninth International Greening of Industry Network Conference.

Implementing Institutional Reforms for Improved Service Delivery

This activity supported USAID's strategic objective for decentralization and participatory government. IRG examined the structure and functions of an inter-governmental secretariat set up by three districts in Yogyakarta city, identified opportunities for improving the delivery of environmental services, strengthened the joint secretariat, improved the solid waste management system, and enhanced integrated water quality management.

Rebuilding and Recovery in Transitional or Post-Conflict States

Community Action Program (CAP). IRG managed the CAP program in Iraq which actively engaged its communities to address critical needs and promote grassroots democratization. Community groups set project priorities and organized community and local government contributions. Project activities covered small-scale infrastructure including schools and clinics, income generation, social cohesion and war victims assistance.

Iraq Local Governance Program. IRG supported USAID in oversight of Iraq's local governance project which strengthened and promoted the following vital components of rebuilding effective governance: local government institutions and service delivery; local and district councils; independent media; civil society; community engagement and outreach; and decentralization. Iraq: Implementation of Emergency Relief and Short-Term Rehabilitation Response

Translating Field Experience into Programming Guidelines for Governance

IRG was tasked with developing four seminal policy papers entitled "What Does and Does Not Work in a Transitional State" for USAID. The papers were based on a survey of comparable activities among a wide range of transitional and post-conflict states to analyze critical policy issues, lessons learned and best practices in: electricity and its role in economic growth; subsidy reform and how to effectively implement it; social welfare reform; and, local governance, all with particular emphasis on their implications for Iraq.

Developing Effective Global Environmental Policies

IRG provides support to strengthen the capacity for implementing USAID's Environmental Procedures, including assistance on the development and implementation of more effective environmental policies and related institutional strengthening. Worldwide: Environmental Compliance & Policy Support

Sustainable Development for Policy Reform

IRG reviewed environmental and natural resource conditions and trends in South Asia and assessed the prospects for more sustainable development through appropriate policy and institutional reforms. The assessment is being used by USAID missions in South Asia, the Asia and the Near East and Global Bureaus, and the US State Department, as well as stakeholders in South Asia, as background for ongoing program planning and management of environmental and natural resources. Regional South Asia: South Asia Environmental Profile
